Abstract: Red culture plays an essential role in the education of young people. It is not only a vivid teaching material for patriotism education but also, through the forms of revolutionary stories, films, and songs, can stimulate students' patriotic emotions, cultivate their sense of historical responsibility, inherit the revolutionary spirit, and shape good moral sentiments. This paper deeply analyzes the significance of red culture education and proposes a series of practical strategies, including the integration of curriculum and teaching methods, the construction of campus cultural environment, the organization of social practice activities, the establishment of a home-school-society collaborative mechanism, the professional development and training of teachers, and the establishment of evaluation and feedback mechanisms. These strategies aim to adapt to the development of the times and better play the positive role of red culture in the education of young people, contributing to the realization of the Chinese Dream of the great rejuvenation of the Chinese nation.

Keywords: red culture education, revolutionary spirit, sense of historical responsibility

Introduction

"Red culture is the advanced culture created and accumulated by the Chinese Communist Party leading the Chinese people in the great practices of revolution, construction, and reform. It includes both the material red resources and the spiritual red spirit."^[1] In the field of education, red culture plays an irreplaceable role. It can stimulate students' patriotic emotions, cultivate their sense of historical responsibility, inherit the revolutionary spirit, and shape good moral sentiments. Through an in-depth analysis of red culture education, this paper will demonstrate its profound impact on cultivating students' patriotic feelings, enhancing their sense of historical responsibility, inheriting the revolutionary spirit, and shaping moral sentiments. At the same time, this paper will also propose a series of educational practice strategies. It aims to better leverage the positive role of red culture in the education of young people in the context of the new era, contributing to the realization of the Chinese Dream of the great rejuvenation of the Chinese nation.

1. The significance of red culture in youth education

1.1 Deepening of patriotic education

"Patriotism is the soul of our Chinese nation, and patriotic education is an important way for the Party and the state to establish socialist core values and an essential course on the journey of the great rejuvenation of the Chinese nation."^[2] Red culture serves as a vivid teaching material for patriotic education. It stimulates students' patriotic enthusiasm by narrating the heroic deeds of revolutionary predecessors and showing the arduous process of revolutionary struggles. In the educational process, methods such as telling red stories, watching red movies, and learning to sing red songs allow students to resonate emotionally with the country's history and culture, thereby cultivating deep patriotic feelings and national pride.

1.2 Cultivation of historical responsibility

By learning about revolutionary history, students can realize that today's happy life is earned with the lives and blood of countless revolutionary martyrs, thus enhancing respect for history and admiration for their forebears. This education helps students establish a correct view of history, understanding that their growth and development are closely linked to the fate of the country, and inspires them to contribute to the prosperity and strength of the nation.

1.3 Inheritance of revolutionary spirit

"Red culture is an advanced culture formed in the process of the sinicization of Marxism, with significant political, economic, ideological, and educational values."^[3] Especially the revolutionary spirit contained in red culture, such as firm beliefs, courage to sacrifice, and hard struggle, is a precious spiritual treasure of the Chinese nation. In education, by organizing students to participate in activities with red themes, such as speeches, essay competitions, and painting, they are guided to deeply understand the connotations of these spirits and encouraged to carry forward the fine traditions of revolutionary predecessors, facing difficulties and challenges without fear, and moving forward bravely.

1.4 Shaping of moral sentiments

The moral models and noble qualities in red culture play an important guiding role in the moral education of young people. By learning about the noble character and selfless dedication of revolutionary predecessors, students can establish correct values and outlooks on life in their hearts. This education helps to cultivate students' spirit of collectivism, learning to care for others and serve society, forming a positive attitude towards life. Through these educational practices, red culture can take root in the hearts of young people, becoming a guiding beacon on their growth path, helping them to establish the correct worldview, outlook on life, and values, and laying a solid foundation for becoming useful talents.

2. Implementation strategies of red culture in youth education

2.1 Integration with curriculum and teaching methods

Red culture education should be closely integrated with school curricula to form an interdisciplinary educational model. In subjects such as language arts, history, and politics, teaching content related to red culture can be introduced, such as revolutionary poetry, historical events, and heroic figures. Some scholars believe that "by cultivating a heroic sentiment, promoting the spirit of heroes, and improving people's understanding of heroes, the ideological and political education function of heroic sentiment can be effectively played."^[4] At the same time, interactive teaching methods with strong engagement, such as case teaching and situational simulation, can be used to let students role-play in simulated revolutionary historical scenes, enhancing the immersion and experience of learning. In addition, multimedia and internet resources, such as red-themed documentaries and online exhibitions, can be used to enrich teaching methods and improve students' interest in learning.

2.2 Creation of campus cultural environment

The campus is the main place for students' daily life, and creating a good red cultural atmosphere is crucial for red culture education. Schools can stimulate students' enthusiasm for participation by holding red-themed art festivals, essay contests, and knowledge competitions. Red cultural corridors or exhibition rooms can be set up in the campus to display revolutionary historical photos, cultural relics, and documentary materials, allowing students to be exposed to and learn about red culture in their daily lives. Moreover, inviting veterans of the revolution or historical scholars to give lectures at school to share revolutionary stories and historical knowledge can enhance students' historical awareness.

2.3 Organization of social practice activities

Social practice is an important part of red culture education. Schools should organize students to visit revolutionary historical museums, memorial halls, and red education bases to let students personally experience and feel the revolutionary history. By participating in volunteer services, community assistance, and other activities, students can apply the spiritual connotation of red culture to practical actions, cultivating their sense of social responsibility and dedication. At the same time, students are encouraged to participate in red-themed social practice activities, such as red tourism and red cultural festivals, to broaden their horizons and deepen their understanding of red culture.

2.4 Establishment of home-school-society collaborative mechanism

Red culture education requires the joint participation and support of families, schools, and society. A home-school-society collaborative mechanism should be established to form an educational force. Schools can share the concept and methods of red culture education with parents through parent meetings and home-school contact platforms, encouraging parents to also pass on red culture in the family. At the same time, schools can cooperate with communities, enterprises, media, and other social forces to jointly carry out red culture education activities, such as community red cultural festivals and enterprise red culture lectures, to expand the influence of red culture education.

2.5 Professional development and training of teachers

Teachers are the implementer of red culture education, and their professional literacy directly affects the effectiveness of education. "As the direct implementer of education, teachers are the key in multicultural education, and their professional literacy directly affects the development of multicultural education."^[5] Schools should pay attention to the training of teachers in red culture education, regularly organizing teachers to participate in red culture lectures and seminars to improve their professional knowledge and teaching ability. At the same time, encourage teachers to innovate in red culture education and form a distinctive teaching model.

2.6 Establishment of evaluation and feedback mechanism

To ensure the effectiveness of red culture education, schools should establish a scientific evaluation and feedback mechanism. By regularly collecting feedback from students, teachers, and parents through questionnaires, interviews, and observations, educational strategies can be adjusted and optimized in a timely manner. At the same time, the effectiveness of red culture education should be included in the evaluation system of school education quality as one of the important indicators to measure the level of school education.

Through the implementation of these strategies, red culture education will more deeply and widely influence students, helping them to establish correct values, cultivate good moral qualities, and lay a solid foundation for becoming responsible and committed socialist builders and successors.

3. Conclusion

This paper emphasizes the significant role of red culture in the education of young people, considering it crucial for nurturing a new generation with a sense of historical responsibility, revolutionary spirit, and noble moral sentiments. Through effective educational strategies, red culture can not only pass down history but also stimulate students' patriotic emotions, contributing to the Chinese Dream of the great rejuvenation of the Chinese nation. Future education should continue to explore and refine the ways and methods of red culture education to ensure its profound influence is sustained and adapted to the needs of the times' development.
